Ganges River

Ganges River

Ganges is a river of life and religion, but also pollution. Flowing for just over 2,600 kilometres across northern India, the Ganges is a vital source of water and life for more than 40 per cent of India's population. Every day, around three million litres of sewage is emptied into the Ganges. The river's waters are so dirty that it's considered one of the most polluted waterways in the world.
