

DIVERSITY

FORMS OF DIVERSITY

WHAT IS DIVERSITY?

If we were to define diversity, we would say that it means accepting the fact that people are different:

in appearance, in gender, each with a certain personality, and so on.

In order to be able to live with each other, we must respect these differences.

At another level, diversity is much more.

People speak different languages, have different traditions and customs, different religions, etc.

This means that people have different cultures

Ethnic and racial diversity

Cultural

CULTURE

Culture is an old word derived from the Latin “cultus” which meant “to cultivate.” Over time, this word has acquired a more comprehensive meaning.

Today culture is the beliefs, customs, and traditions of a specific group of people. Each culture has its own way of life. People from the same culture share the same value.

CULTURE IS LIKE AN ICEBERG

An iceberg, which includes visible elements but also more numerous features that are much more difficult to distinguish.

Diversity means having many different types of something.

Cultural diversity exists when a population is made up of people from many different cultures

Cultural diversity creates a diverse world. The more culturally different the world is, the more we can discover new opportunities and ways to express ourselves.

Identity is not only personal, but also social, each depending on the culture we belong to, which means that we need cultural diversity without which the world would be poorer.
